INTRODUCTION

There are different definitions of the concept of personality in psychological literature in order to clarify the essence of this concept we will stop at some of them. In particular, N. Ismailova, D. Abdullayeva to the concept of personality in the "Social Psychology" study guide is defined as follows: A person is a concrete person, of a certain state, society, group (this group is social, ethnic, religious, political, age-related, etc. can be) a representative, able to establish a conscious relationship with those around him, able to act consciously, uniquely human in all relationships capable of manifesting an image, as well as being uniquely individual and subjective is someone who has characteristics. "Man is from the animal world because of work separated.

With other people with the help of developing language in society (communication) a person who enters into communication becomes a person. Social essence is the main description of the person. As a general conclusion, a person is a person living in society who is engaged in certain work activities and has a conscious attitude that can directly communicate with other people. In the science of world psychology, various theories have been created about the maturity of a person and his development and researchers are in different positions in the study of human personality and they have a unique approach to clarifying the essence of the problem. This is it theories include biogenetic, sociogenetic, psychogenetic, cognitive, psychoanalytic, behavioral ones can be included. In general, none of these theories one, excluding the influence of the family environment on the formation of the human personality does not pass.

In particular, kinship, tradition, and good neighborly relations are good In the developed regions of Central Asia, the role of the family in the formation of personality is very important is high. Uzbekistan is somewhat different from European countries In the conditions of the attitude to the education of children and upbringing different aspects are noticeable. It happened to him in the early years of the child Paying attention to him is a bit slow, taking into account his thoughts is not always considered an important event for parents. And vice versa attention to the child when he reaches a certain age (adolescence, adolescence) increase causes some disagreements between parents and children bringsOf course, this phenomenon is only caused by a change in attention to the child would be out of place to describe it. In particular, the child's adolescence the psychophysiological changes that occur during the period of his maturity is one of the important stages. By this time, teenagers are independent the concept of life is formed, and these concepts are only in the imagination not characterized by its practical aspect.

The change in the attitude towards the surrounding people and the adult attitude towards them motivates to behave like an adult. At the same time, choosing a certain profession and carrying out his activities in it, who he will be in the future, how he will lead his life, becomes of great importance for him. Big man

No matter how much you want to live an independent life, you are still a teenager at this time feels subordinate to adults and adults in serious matters feels the need for help. In general, it occurs at any age coming psychological and physiological changes in one or another aspect of a person plays an important role in the development and formation of a person, and this Ignoring aspects is just limited to false conclusions can be a reason to stay. The family is the basis of the path from birth to the formation of a person as a mature person, and many scientists accept this as a correct classification. The first steps towards raising a future person are taken in the family. Man learns his first life lessons in the family and of his future character under the influence of the environment that exists right here formation begins.

The family is a magical mirror for the child, in which the family members all changes in the personal and social life of a certain people and nation he sees the level of spiritual development, culture and shapes it in himself. He spends the most time with the child during his early years people are definitely his parents and other family members. At this point, it is impossible not to consider the influence of parents on the development of children in the family. In particular, the role of the child in his development and his relationship with the mother there are detailed comments about its importance in psychological literature. "Family the most effective, attractive and important part of the relationship is mother-child are relationships. Their importance is the same initial communication and affection relationships shape the further psychic and mental development of the child and the behavior of the mother. In the first moments of childbirth, mother and child are mutual they are physically and psychologically connected, both are one body, one being is considered Therefore, their relationship is symbiotic (homogeneity, combined departure, loneliness).

As the child grows up, the distance and psychological distance between them increases, symbiotic relations turn into psychological relations in the form of mental-cognitive relations. Therefore, the mother's role is incomparable in the formation of a person's initial understanding, thoughts and views and the foundation of the world around him. The perception of a child's view of the world at the age of kindergarten or junior school is mainly based on the views of the people around him, his parents and teachers will come. At this time, the concepts of right, wrong, good and bad for a child in general, the views of people around all views are directly reflected in it is enough. Emotional connection and interaction of the child with the mother scientists classify differently. For example, based on the recorded behavior of a child aged 12 to 18 months separated from his mother for 3 minutes, scientists have distinguished four different forms of emotional attachment:

- Reliable connection. In such conditions, the child confidently looks for his mother, the surroundings learns; when he begins to feel that he is gone, he becomes depressed, sad, when his mother comes back, he greets him with great joy and laughs and asks for his mother;

- Deviating dependency. When he realizes that his mother is gone, he looks around, looks for him, but when the mother returns, his attempts to her are minimal, even looking backwards continues to play with his toys;

- Ambivalent dependence. When his mother left, he seemed to be frozen in depression falls, does not play and does not look around; to his mother when his mother returned neither seeks it nor avoids it. That he is sad and happy it will be difficult to understand;

- Irregular dependence. Apparently, it is difficult to observe the child's attachment to the mother the child is indifferent to everything; it is difficult to follow the logic in actions. In this place, the place of family and parents is extremely important in the development of a person of this influence on the development of a person as a person in society it is impossible not to dwell on its importance. It is known from psychological literature a person has a set of fundamental views on life from a young age forms and at the same time builds its future on this foundation, is shaping itself.

To sum up, the family is the foundation of national education. Therefore, for a person to become a perfect and mature person, the family occupies an important place. Before giving education to a child, parents should be a mirror example of education to their children. Of course, for the future of our children it is necessary to be attentive, not to spare anything in the way of their perfection. Giving love to children, feeding them and idolizing them in their own way, but raising children from their youth based on national education, morals, and high spirituality is always important for us is enough.
